Curriculum To Utilize Audio-Visual Center

Audio-visual equipment in the classroom should present few problems to today's Methodist College teacher graduate.

Alleviating the would-be problems is the Audio-Visual Center, newly-opened in September in the Trustees Classroom Building. An expansion of the Materials Center formerly housed in Davis Memorial Library, the A-V Center was established with the aid of a federal matching grant.

Use of the center will be made through individual work and audio-visual instruction, the beginnings of which is now in progress. Roy McClelland, assistant professor of education, and James Price, director of the center, are team-teaching Education 411: Materials and Methods in the Elementary School I.

"Our object is to show various methods of teaching in general (including audio-visual), while at the same time trying to teach the specific subject of reading," Price explained. "It will hopefully give the future teachers an opportunity to explore and develop their own special interest."

In addition, a proposed audio-visual course is tentatively scheduled for summer school, June 5—July 17, Price said.

Equipment presently available in the Audio-Visual Center includes overhead, 35mm, 16mm, 8mm and opaque projectors, controlled readers, and a diffusion-transfer machine.

Additional equipment enables dry-mounting, color-lifting, laminating, mimeographing, spirit duplicating and transparency-making.

Materials stocked in the center include tapes, records, filmstrips and books. The book section is divided into three categories: 1) juvenile library collection; 2-3) basic state-adopted textbooks and supplementary books used in primary and secondary schools.

Although the center does not stock films, it provides a film-booking service (with access to 1500 films) by working in cooperation with the Cumberland County Public Library.

The educational media now available for utilization in the classroom permits the teacher to get across more quickly and effectively the ideas and information that he has to impart, a Fayetteville audio-visual education authority has said.

Now the Methodist College future teacher is learning how to take advantage of audio-visual technology.

Hensdale Chapel Under Construction

Construction advances on the J. W. Hensdale Chapel for which ground was broken in early January, 1969.

Named in honor of Hensdale, secretary of the Board of Trustees, the Chapel will rise at the east end of the Fine Arts Building along the central mall of the campus (see X in above picture). Hensdale was instrumental in raising funds necessary to erect the building.

Design of the chapel, executed by Stevens & Wilkinson of Atlanta, features a brick and concrete exterior for the square, one-story building. The arched roof has a window at the peak, the primary means of natural light to the interior. Finish for the interior will be red oak paneling.

The Fayetteville construction firm of Player, Incorporated is building the structure at a total cost of $71,950. Completion of the chapel is expected by September 1, 1969.

New Posts Filled

Charles L. McCullers, a Methodist layman from Dunn, is the new director of institutional advancement. Coming to this position, McCullers filled an existing vacancy on the staff and became the head for a newly created administrative division. This division brings together and coordinates the Department of Public Relations and the Department of Development.

The new director brings to his position 17 years experience as secretary of the Chamber of Commerce at Kinston and 3 years in a like capacity at Dunn. For the past three years McCullers has been a platform and convention speaker.

Neil H. Thompson, formerly a Methodist minister, has assumed the position of Director of Admissions. Thompson, who served as a minister in the Raleigh district, is primarily responsible for student recruitment at Methodist. Ordained as an Elder in The United Methodist Church, Thompson was particularly effective in his ministry with young people. His appointment brings together the duties of admissions and student recruitment.
