FOUNDERS HONORED AT METHODIST COLLEGE

FAYETTEVILLE-Methodist College held its Ninth Annual Founders Day Friday, November 1.

Greeting an assembled group of trustees, administration, faculty and students, Dr. Mott P. Blair, chairman of the Board of Trustees, paid tribute to the dedication of administration and faculty members saying that "because of you, we have a future to build upon."

Larry Barnes, president of the Methodist College Alumni Association, brought the meaning of Founders Day home as he said:

"Ten years ago when ground was broken for the first building at Methodist College, I was an eighth grade student. Today I return as an eighth grade teacher.

"This has been a meaningful and progressive period of transition for me which was made possible by the efforts of the founding fathers.

"The Alumni Association joins the trustees, administration, and faculty in the continued unearthing of a quality education in a Christian atmosphere."

John Pate, president of the Methodist College Foundation, pointed to the college itself as evidence of cooperation between college and community, and pledged the foundation to the continuance of that cooperation.

ADD ONE-Methodist College Founders Day

The Rev. James Auman, executive director of the Association of Methodist Colleges, brought greetings from other Methodist colleges in the state saying that he realized love for on another might depend to some extent upon victory on the athletic field.

Robert Swink, president of the Student Government Association, lauded the efforts of the founding fathers in beginning a college with "great potential."

Dedication ceremonies were held for five facilities. Dr. L. Stacy Weaver, college president, conducted ceremonies as the Auditorium was dedicated in honor of John M. Reeves of Pinehurst; the Administration Building in honor of W. E. Horner of Sanford; the pool and fountain in honor of W. Ed Fleishman of Fayetteville; a chemistry laboratory in honor of Mrs. J. Bernard Stein, formerly of Fayetteville; and the Classroom Building in honor of the first Board of Trustees.

Methodist College Audio-Visual Center

TEACHING TEACHERS HOW TO TEACH

FAYETTEVILLE - Audio-visual equipment in the classroom should present few problems to today's Methodist College teacher graduate.

Alleviating the would-be problems is the newly opened Audio-Visual Center in the Trustees Classroom Building, an expansion of the Materials Center formerly housed in Davis Memorial Library.

An audio-visual center teaches the future teacher how to take advantage of audio-visual technology, according to James H. Price, Jr., assistant librarian and director of the Methodist College A-V Center.

"The center is also designed to give students an idea of where equipment and free materials can be found, how materials can be made, and how equipment and materials can be used," Price said.

The educational media now available for utilization in the classroom permits the teacher to get across more quickly and effectively the ideas and information that he has to impart, according to A. I. Maynard, director of audio-visual education for the Fayetteville City Schools.

"Everytime audio-visual resources can be used," Maynard said, "they enhance the person's teaching."

According to Maynard, when student teachers go out into the school systems, they are confronted with newer educational media of a better quality and larger quantity than was available a few years ago.

"They will be teaching in a situation using methodology that teachers a few years ago never thought would confront them," Maynard said.

MORE

"The more the college can familiarize the student with instructional media, the more effective he will be as a teacher."

EQUIPMENT

Established with the aid of a federal matching grant, the Methodist College A-V Center is now stocked with overhead, 35mm, 16mm, 8mm and opaque projectors as well as controlled readers.

MATERIALS

Materials presently available in the center include tapes, records, filmstrips and books. The book section of the center is divided into three categories: 1) juvenile library collection; 2) basic state-adopted textbooks used in elementary schools; and 3) basic state-adopted textbooks and supplementary books used in secondary schools.

PRODUCTION

Production materials play a large part in the center's service to students as well as to members of the Methodist College faculty.

"Our equipment enables us to make transparencies and spirit duplications and to do drymounting, color-lifting, laminating and mimeographing as well as to give instruction in these processes," Price said.

Showing how production materials could be used, Price said, a biology teacher could make a transparency from a diagram of the human brain to show on the overhead projector. He could also make spirit duplications of the same diagram so that each student in the class would have a copy to follow and to study.

Another service provided by the center is the booking of films. By working in cooperation with the Cumberland County Public Library, the center has access to 1500 films.

Also modeling will be: Sylvia Grainger, Tabor City; Gay Inman, Sanford; Kendall Marlow, N. Wilkesboro; Barbara Powell, Grifton; Joannie Raymond, Raleigh; Gayle Rogers, Haw River and Lynn Seacord, Scarsdale, N.Y.

About 40 ensembles will be shown for the event.

M.C. SHOW FASHIONS — Connie Autry of Strickland Bridge Rd., a model for the annual Garber Hall Fashion Show, selects a style she will wear in the 8 p.m. Monday, Nov. 25 event. Here Connie tries an evening fashion from Christy's Ladies Apparel: A hot pink in rippled tiers with billowing sleeves. Proceeds from the show will be used for Christmas toys for underprivileged children and furnishings for the women's dormitory.
