METHODIST COLLEGE ADDS ACADEMIC INNOVATIONS

FAYETTEVILLE-----The end of its first decade of instruction found Methodist College still building -- shaping academic innovations.

A two-year experiment for a "pass-fail" option in elective courses is being launched for upper-classmen at the four-year, liberal arts institution.

The pass-fail innovation, available to juniors and seniors on a trial basis for two years, enables students to take elective courses, earning semester hours toward graduation requirements without adding to their quality points in computation of grade-point averages. The concept of the program originated with the Student Academic Affairs Committee.

Two new courses in ecology have been introduced on an inter-departmental basis.

The science department approached environmental problems from a cause-and-effect angle during first semester this year, with field trips and lab experiments which measured water and air pollution in selected Cumberland County area sites.

The sociology, political science, economics and history departments are collaborating with the philosophy and religion departments in a second-semester sequel which will approach environmental problems from the standpoint of social, ethical and religious considerations.

Another innovation to help establish Methodist College as a strong liberal arts institution is the addition of art as the fourteenth major in 1970-71.

A featured tradition of the art department is the showing of a monthly art exhibit on campus -- from traveling collections to one-man student shows in sculpture, painting, drawing and other media.

Personalized, quality instruction in studio art courses have attributed to a marked increase in popularity of art on campus.

The same individualized instruction is available in the music department and other areas, attributing to the close family-community atmosphere at Methodist College.

The student-faculty ratio in classes averages 14:1; a student is considered an individual, not number 18,746.

At Methodist College the president of the student senate may be captain of the soccer team, too. The co-editor of the yearbook may be the student government association secretary and have an overall average of 3.53 at graduation on a 4.00 scale.

Through leadership, academic excellence, service and spiritual development, students are encouraged to develop personalities which constructively influence society.

Approximately 30 campus groups and organizations offer fellowship, community service and development of talents in the arts, sciences and athletics.

The college is a member of the Dixie Intercollegiate Athletic Conference. Its physical education department provides students a strong program of intramural sports and intercollegiate challenges in eight sports.

Methodist College has become a community where people communicate.

At Methodist College "...other students and members of the faculty and administration CARE about you as a person...you have a chance to develop your identity, to realize yourself... College is what you make it here... and people are friendly...."

Statements like the above were made to the Alumni Association's liaison committee which conferred with faculty, administration and student representatives on the campus last fall.

With only seven classes graduated, an active alumni leadership has contributed to the establishment of four chapters in Richmond, Va., Raleigh, Charlotte and Fayetteville. Plans for Winston-Salem and Washington, D. C., chapters are underway.

Since the college opened to students in 1960, it has experienced a decade of definition and progress.

The modern campus is formed by nineteen buildings and structures, including a color-lighted fountain and pool, a chapel interiored with red oak, and a bell tower which amplifies a carillon system.

Located six miles north of Fayetteville, the campus is constructed on a series of interlocking malls and rolling woodlands adjacent to the Cape Fear River.

Four modern, air-conditioned dormitories accomodate North Carolinians, out-of-state and foreign students.

When the first 88 freshmen enrolled in 1960, there were four buildings and a few sprigs of grass on campus.

Now the physical plant has been finalized almost completely into a beautiful, distinctive campus with an administration that encourages quality education.

As academic innovations are shaped at Methodist College, today's students are helping to build traditions in a community atmosphere.

Sanford's visit

FAYETTEVILLE --- Speaking on "The Structure of Higher Education in North Carolina," Dr. Terry Sanford, President of Duke University, addressed ~~to~~ an assembly of students, faculty and administrators at Methodist College here yesterday. Wednesday in Reeves Auditorium at 11:30 A.M.

Sanford explained the importance of maintaining a dual system of private and public institutions in the state "to promote the cause of academic freedom."

Sanford said, "the former balance of students in public and private institutions was 50 - 50, but the current balance is two to one." He said, "a public policy which dries up the dual system is a bad policy."

The former "education governor" explained the program for tuition equalization which the state is being asked to support. He said a public policy to protect the dual system is important to North Carolina taxpayers.

In explaining alternative proposals being considered by the North Carolina General Assembly, Sanford said he favored equalization grants for students who choose to attend private colleges.

"I think the state owes a student equal treatment," Sanford said, "whether he chooses a public or a private institution. Therefore, he should be given an equalization grant to apply to tuition costs -- a procedure employed in many states already."

Sanford cited the example of Duke's receiving $26,000 from the state of Pennsylvania for the tuition cost of Pennsylvania students enrolling at Duke.

He said that tuition equalization would assure fair treatment of all students, giving them a choice of colleges not based on the cost of tuition. It would preserve private colleges and the dual system of education in the state, and it would save the state "millions of dollars."

Sanford served as the first chairman of the Methodist College Board of Trustees from 1956 - 1967. The liberal arts college opened to students in 1960 and has a capacity for 1200 students.

Commenting on the growth of Fayetteville's newest senior college, Sanford told the assembly that "students have more to do with the shaping of the college's future than anyone else," and that Methodist College had given a new spirit to the North Carolina Conference of the Methodist Church.

Sanford spoke briefly with students and administrators after the program.
