"Pygmalion" To Be Staged At Methodist

Jean Hutchinson, Public Relations Office
488-7110, Ext. 228

FAYETTEVILLE-----Rehearsals continue at Methodist College for the Thursday and Friday, October 7 and 8, production of George Bernard Shaw's "Pygmalion."

The play is a romance between a young cockney flower girl, Eliza Doolittle, and a middle-aged bachelor phoneticist, Henry Higgins. Higgins attempts to make a lady out of Eliza, and he wagers Colonel Pickering, his colleague, that he'll succeed.

In Act Four, Eliza triumphs at an ambassador's party. As a lady, she considers a personal goal, winning the love and respect of Pygmalion Higgins.

Methodist freshman Martha Eddy from Wilmington, Dela., joins seniors Phil Bauguess from Kernersville and Paul Reinhard from Fayetteville as characters probably drawn from Shaw's youth, in one of the playwright's best-known dramas -- a lively battle between the sexes. Fourteen other Methodist College drama club members complete the cast. A technical crew of thirteen is working on stage sets, make-up, costumes, lighting, and publicity.

"Pygmalion" was first performed in Berlin in 1913 and in New York in 1914, first in German and later in English. It was screened by Gabriel Pascal and received the Academy Award for the best screen play of 1938.

The public is invited to each 8:00 p.m. performance in Reeves Auditorium at Methodist College. There is no admission charge.
