Methodist College Campaign Launched

J. Hutchinson, P. R. Office 488-7110, Ext. 228

In a keynote address on the local campus Tuesday, John Ormsby, a former Methodist College Foundation director, said, "The time for action is now. Seven hundred liberal arts colleges in America are facing the problem of depleted operating funds...including Methodist College."

Ormsby, a former Fayetteville resident and businessman, now from Wilmington, told participants in the college's Loyalty Fund Campaign, "It is your job to see that the $50,000 annual pledge is met this year. The college has had a strong cultural influence on the community... it is sending out students well-equipped for life.... It is an important million dollar industry," he said at the kick-off campaign luncheon attended by 83 trustees, campaign workers, Methodist College Foundation directors and other guests.

Ormsby stressed the need for maintaining a dual system of higher education. "The higher educational system of America that we enjoy today was begun by liberal arts institutions.... Most Americans take for granted the dual system of state and private institutions.... We must remain independent," he said.

Ormsby was introduced by J. Scott McFadyen, second vice president of the Foundation. McFadyen and C. C. Ingram are co-chairmen of the 1972-73 Loyalty Fund Campaign.

The goal of the drive, which officially began Tuesday, is $120,000 -- $50,000 is for annual operating expenses, and $70,000 is for principal and interest payments on a 30-year trust indenture. The loan was procured because just over one million of the two million dollars pledged by the Fayetteville community was provided when the college was founded.

Foundation treasurer Fred C. Clark reported that $49,897.04 in gifts had been received already.
