METHODIST COLLEGE CHORUS TO PRESENTS "CHRISTMAS CAROUSEL"

FAYETTEVILLE---The annual "Christmas Carousel" will be presented by the College Chorus of Methodist College Dec. 7th and 8th at 7 p.m. in Reeves Auditorium on campus.

Participating with the College Chorus this year will be the 71st High School Chorus under the direction of Mrs. Larry Parsons and the Guy Schools Chorus under the direction of Mrs. Judy Aycock. Admission is $1.25 for adults and 75¢ for students.

"About 250 singers will perform each night," said Alan Porter, College Chorus director at Methodist and coordinator for the performances. "There will be times when all 250 sing at once while other parts of the program will be devoted to the individual choirs. In addition, the college's English Handbell Ensemble will perform."

Porter said that since ~~two~~ performances are scheduled this year, he foresaw no standing room conditions again which were present last year.

Tickets can be purchased at the door the night of the performance. Advance sale tickets can be purchased at Methodist College, 71st High School, and Guy Schools.

The program is divided into five sections: Devotional, patriotic, winter, Santa's toyshop, and sacred.

PROGRAM

Devotional: Suffer Little Children To Come Unto Me. Guy School Choir & Betty Parsons.

To Address Conference

FAYETTEVILLE--Dr. Sudhakar Gautam, chairman of Methodist College's economics and business administration department, will present a paper entitled "Benign Neglect of Water Supplies in the Developing Countries" to the American Water Resources Association which is meeting Nov. 18 in San Juan, Puerto Rico.

Gautam, who already has had two books published, is putting the finishing touches on his third book which will be entitled "Problems of Water Resources Development in Developing Countries." In addition, he has written articles on water problems for "The Financial Express" and "The Economic Times."

"By 1980, worldwide fresh water demands will increase 240 per cent over present levels of use," said Gautam. "Without proper planning, there will soon be a serious water crisis much worse than the food crisis one hears so much about today. For example, at the recent World Food Conference in Rome, it was estimated that 300-400 million people are hungry. But there are over 500 million suffering from diseases spread by impure water."

Gautam said the food and water crises are tied together very closely. Much of the hunger today is caused by lack of rain and weathermen are forecasting continued drought.

However, poor quality water cannot be blamed entirely on the weather as Gautam shows in his study.

Gautam said the food and water crises are tied together very closely. Much of the hunger today is caused by lack of rain and weathermen are forecasting continued drought.

However, poor quality water cannot be blamed entirely on the weather as Gautam shows in his study.

"Most of the governmental authorities in the developing countries have a tendency to look at this problem as one of inconvenience to the people rather than seeing its deeper economic implications. Studies, however, made by the World Health Organization have shown a clear relationship between safe and ample water supply and economic growth. Inadequate water supply poses problems of the most elemental level of challenges to the people at the precarious level of survival and in terms of social cost, the loss of man-hours as a result of diseases caused by unsafe water is stupendous.

"Most of the big cities have a long-standing problem of inadequacy in water supply for meeting present population needs, much less for coping with the projected growth of population over the coming years. Thus, the systems are operating far above capacity, resulting in the deterioration of quality of services to all consumers. Orderly advance planning is rare. A brief review of the governmental policy in some countries brings home the startling fact that most of the projects were undertaken in response to a crisis rather than in anticipation of needs.

"Last, but not least, most of the water utilities in these countries are poorly organized and elementary principles of public utility management have not been observed. Therefore, better financial planning and strengthened management policies are needed to improve the efficiency of the operation," Gautam concluded.

MC PROFESSORS CERTIFIED

AS ACCREDITATION EXPERTS

FAYETTEVILLE--Three Methodist College professors have been certified as consultants to serve in any junior high or high school in North Carolina working in the pursuit of initial or continuing accreditation by the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools. They are: Dr. Fred C. McDavid, professor of education and psychology; Mr. Robert L. Crisp, assistant professor of education; and Mr. Bruce R. Pulliam, assistant professor of social studies.

Thus far, from the eastern part of the state, only Methodist and UNC-Wilmington have had professors become certified consultants. According to Roy R. Blanton, chairman of the SACS Secondary Committee, "Beginning in the fall of 1975, only those consultants who have been certified will be permitted to work with schools preparing for initial or reaccreditation."

Invitations to become certified consultants are issued to professors on the basis of their interest, knowledge, and commitment to quality education for all students and are willing to complete the prescribed course of study," said Blanton.
