RELEASE TO WIRE SERVICES ON ANNUAL CONFERENCE, DAY 2:

Eastern North Carolina United Methodists saluted W. C. Chadwick, well-known New Bern resident, today as "Layperson of the Year," for the North Carolina United Methodist Conference. The special presentation given during the second day of the annual conference being held on the Methodist College campus, came as a surprise to the 89-year old New Bern man.

Chadwick was nominated by the officers of Centenary United Methodist Church for his Christian character and "tremendous leadership to the church and community." He has been a member of the Centenary Church for 76 years and a lay member of the Annual Conference (Eastern North Carolina) for more than 65 years. Chadwick has attended five general conferences, United Methodism's top legislative body, and has held numerous offices at the conference and district levels.

Honors also went to two churches in the conference for outstanding progress and accomplishments. Citing increases in church school and worship service attendance and the church budget, Gillburg United Methodist Church received top honors in the rural church category. Pastor of the church is the Reverend Charles A. Pullins, a student at the Divinity School, Duke University.

Page Memorial Church in Aberdeen, led by the Reverend Robert Pullman, captured the award in the urban category. Through the support of the Page Memorial congregation, the Lighthouse United Methodist Church--with a congregation of three races--was born.

Another significant accomplishment for this 545-member church is that four of the church members are entering the ordained ministry.

The conference nominated the Reverend Wallace H. Kirby, Raleigh, as a candidate for a bishop in the United Methodist Church of the Southeast. Kirby will be one of approximately 20 ministers nominated from the Southeastern Jurisdiction. Three bishops will be elected from the 20 during the Jurisdictional Conference at Lake Junaluska, July 15-20.

Another minister of the conference, the Reverend Dr. Joseph B. Bethea, is being backed by black delegates to the Jurisdictional Conference. North Carolina delegates are expected to back both candidates. Even if elected a bishop, neither Kirby nor Bethea could be assigned to the North Carolina Conference until their first four-year term had been completed.

A resolution was brought to the floor of the conference to commend the J.P. Stevens Company and its employees for their work "towards compliance with the National Labor Relations Act, the Occupational Safety and Health Act, and the Civil Rights Act."

This action was recommended because of the statistical progress cited by the company in salary increases, minority and women employment, and safety and health improvements.

The General Conference of the United Methodist Church in April had issued a boycott of the J. P. Stevens' products, an action not endorsed by the N.C. delegation. The resolution was referred to committee for study and will be brought before the conference on Thursday.

The meeting of the 1325 delegates, both clergy and lay, will continue through Thursday.

A RESOLUTION

For more than three (3) years J. P. Stevens & Company, Inc. has been hampered by a conflict with the ACTWU and the NLRB which has brought Stevens into the public limelight. We believe it is our Christian responsibility realistically and fairly to evaluate and respond to the Stevens question.

WHEREAS, J. P. Stevens & Company, Inc., operates 83 plants and provides employment for 34,000 textile production workers;

WHEREAS, J. P. Stevens & Company, Inc. has demonstrated an above average sense of cooperation and responsiveness from administration, to management, to workers. In all situations Stevens has shown a willingness to listen to and respond to the needs of their employees;

WHEREAS, the employees of Stevens have endorsed their relationship with management by a more than 3 to 1 margin;

WHEREAS, in the conflict between Stevens and the NLRB and the ACTWU, the ACTWU has misled the public by making numerous charges of unfair labor and safety practices, which cannot be substantiated, of which 65% have been withdrawn or denied, 10% have been settled and 25% are under investigation;

WHEREAS, BE IT RESOLVED, that the North Carolina Annual Conference affirm its faith in United Methodists employed by Stevens, and commend their spirit of reconciliation as they and J. P. Stevens & Company, Inc. strive together toward an equitable resolution of the sense of conflict which looms over the Corporation.

REPORT OF THE ANNUAL CONFERENCE, DAY 3:

FAYETTEVILLE--Clergy couples and the problems they face were the focus of the 1325 delegates to the Annual Conference of the North Carolina Conference of the United Methodist Church meeting this week at Methodist College here.

Dr. David Mace, world-reknown authority on marriage counseling, addressed the group with the results of his most recent studies on the needs of clergy couples.

"If these clergy couples are having trouble establishing a loving relationship--and they are--then marriage everywhere is in trouble," says Mace.

"Christianity is the religion of love," he emphasized, "and the ministers of that gospel are many times facing a failure to express love in their personal relationships with their families."

Citing extensive interviews with clergy couples, Dr. Mace found four major causes of stress: expectations of the congregations in not allowing them to be human; the heavy schedule for pastors, often 70-80 hours a week; a lack of privacy in the "goldfish syndrome;" and financial troubles.

Dr. Mace also reported that his studies revealed a reluctance to hold family worship on a daily basis in clergy families. He emphasized the need for more open communication, more concrete techniques for solving problems and more realistic expectations of each other if stress is to be minimized.

In other action today, Carol Denise Jones of Wilmington was recognized by the North Carolina Methodists as the 1980-81 recipient of the Blackburn Scholarship. The award is for $1000 for the first year, with the opportunity of continued aid based on sufficient academic progress. The scholarship honors the conference's bishop, the Reverend Robert M. Blackburn.

The Wilmington youth plans to attend Methodist College and major in business administration.

The conference colleges all reported marked progress and achievement. Louisburg College expects capacity enrollment and dorm occupancy this fall while Methodist College is up 38% in enrollment and has reached its $1 million endowment figure. N.C. Wesleyan reports that it is stronger than ever with its largest graduating class in 1980.

The conference concludes Thursday afternoon with the reading of pastoral appointments.

REPORT OF THE ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF THE NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE, DAY 4:

June 5, 1980

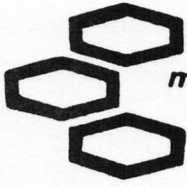

FAYETTEVILLE--United Methodist members meeting in the closing hour of their annual conference refused to commend or denounce the J.P. Stevens Textile Company today. The conference overturned a committee recommendation commending Stevens for its compliance with labor laws and asked that the denomination call off its boycott of the products. Instead, the church people voted to have a committee study the issue in the coming year.

A similar position was taken Wednesday by the South Carolina United Methodist Conference and delegates to the Western North Carolina United Methodist Conference are expected to vote on the issue Friday or Saturday.

In other business, the Equal Rights Amendment was affirmed by the conference delegates by only a 19-vote margin during a lengthy presentation of position papers and resolutions. The conference approved a position paper allowing the legal moral choice for abortion, but refused to pass a resolution opposing the draft or registration for the draft.

Members of the North Carolina General Assembly were called upon to repeal the North Carolina tax on food, reasoning that the tax causes a hardship on low and modest income persons. The church group asked that revenues come instead from an increase in the tax on alcoholic beverages.

Bishop Robert M. Blackburn, presiding at his last annual conference of the North Carolina Conference before taking a new assignment in September, concluded the four-day meeting of 1408 delegates with the reading of pastoral appointments. The conference was held on the campus of Methodist College.

SMALL, PRIVATE COLLEGES FACE
SECURE FUTURE IN THE 1980's

Americans have always preserved their option to choose whatever lifestyle suited their individual needs. Some choose to live in the megatropolis areas like New York, Chicago and Los Angeles--some choose to live in comfortable urban areas of 200,000-500,000--and some choose to live in small towns rich in heritage and community spirit.

This same option of lifestyle exists in higher education in America. Students choose a college based on their individual needs and preferences. Some students seek specialized degrees available only from a major university or they welcome the aura of status institutions like Big Ten or Ivy League schools. Others choose a small college environment where they can achieve the recognition and the opportunity for leadership they need for the well-rounded life they seek.

Private colleges fill that role in American society--the small towns of higher education geography. While there was a period of time in the early 1970's when private colleges faced a dismal financial future and a dwindling student pool, the initial panic has passed. Small colleges will continue to grow and flourish in American society, despite these real problems of inflated economy and fewer college-age students, because they fulfill a need for individuals. To accept the premise that the private sector of education will pass into history to be replaced by a complex structure of public regional universities and community colleges is to accept

The reason for such optimism in private colleges is three-fold: the backlash of "bigger is better" philosophy reflected in consolidated high schools, the increasing percentage of students attending four-year colleges, and the new emphasis on job placement after college.

Sufficient time has passed to evaluate the success of the consolidated high school theory that emerged in 1960. After twenty years, obvious accomplishments can be noted: expanded curricula, expanded athletic offerings, and diminished social, economic and racial prejudices. At the same time, a clear and defined decrease in student leadership, student achievement and student involvement is recorded.

The reasons are clear. Only one student body president is elected, whether the school has 500 or 5000 students. These same figures hold true for other student body officers, yearbook and newspaper editors, cheerleaders, majorettes, club presidents, etc. Consequently, a multitude of students who have the ability and the desire to serve in leadership capacities are denied the opportunity by sheer numbers. The chance to excel, to lead, and to achieve in the high school arena is considerably less now than twenty years ago. It is from the large number of students who just miss out on leadership roles or who are too intimidated by reduced odds of winning to run that small, private colleges receive their most enthusiastic support.

Dr. Henry Taylor, in an address to the school of education at Wayne State College, postulated the law that "people tend to

At the same time, a clear and defined decrease in student leadership, student achievement and student involvement is recorded.

The reasons are clear. Only one student body president is elected, whether the school has 500 or 5000 students. These same figures hold true for other student body officers, yearbook and newspaper editors, cheerleaders, majorettes, club presidents, etc. Consequently, a multitude of students who have the ability and the desire to serve in leadership capacities are denied the opportunity by sheer numbers. The chance to excel, to lead, and to achieve in the high school arena is considerably less now than twenty years ago. It is from the large number of students who just miss out on leadership roles or who are too intimidated by reduced odds of winning to run that small, private colleges receive their most enthusiastic support.

Dr. Henry Taylor, in an address to the school of education at Wayne State College, postulated the law that "people tend to disappear when huddled together in large numbers." This theory provided the basis of intensive study on institutional size by Arthur W. Chickering, compiled in his book EDUCATION AND IDENTITY.

"In large schools, students become superfluous or redundant. Under these conditions, they don't develop much. What does redundant or superfluous mean? Redundancy is five persons for a game of bridge or ten persons for a baseball team. It's twenty persons on a trout stream or two thousand on a beach. It's a class play that calls for twenty, in a class of eighty, or an athletic program with places for eighty in a school of eight hundred," explains Chickering.

R.G. Barker and P.V. Grump in BIG SCHOOL, SMALL SCHOOL provide statistical data revealing that students in small schools held an average of 3.5 responsible positions per student (members of play casts, musical groups, athletics teams, etc.) while students in large schools averaged .5 responsible positions per student.

Small colleges are defined as those having fewer than 5000 students, although the majority of small colleges reflect an enrollment of 1000-2500. Statistics depict a decrease in the number of college-aged students in the coming years as a natural result of the decline in birth rate during the 1960's.

Alarmists reason that these statistics are inflexible and will result in a smaller pool of students planning to attend college, thus increasing the already fierce competition among colleges for these students. Small, private colleges with higher overhead and consequently higher tuition costs will simply not be able to attract students in an inflated economy, the reasoning goes. Without students, these institutions will close.

Educational experts, however, see an expanded set of statistics which reflect optimism for all colleges and universities. While it is true that the number of students of college age is decreasing, it is also true that the percentage of students choosing to attend four years of college is increasing in substantial quantity .

Southern States, for example, rate considerably behind that national average of college-aged students choosing to attend college. Although we continue to shorten the gap, the fact remains that if these states ever reach the national percentage, there will be more than enough students to fill all private and public colleges and universities in the South to capacity.

All national polls have reflected a shift of emphasis in priority of college students from self-fulfillment to job security and professional achievement. Students today are products of a time of economic uncertainty and they feel acutely the competition for jobs in the marketplace. Private colleges, particularly the smaller ones, afford a more individualized and more intensified placement effort than larger universities by virtue of the number each must attempt to place.

Versatility has long been the hallmark of American lifestyle. In keeping with the basic premise upon which the nation was founded, higher education is available to all students who seek it in any environment they might choose. No institution can be all things to all students. In American society, the responsibility rests upon the student to evaluate and choose, from a variety of colleges, the one which seems best suited to his respective needs. This infinite variety of college sizes, philosophies, faculties and locations is unique to the American educational system. No other country can offer its students such freedom of choice.

The future of the small, private college is secure although the problems facing all institutions of higher learning are real. As long as there are students who need the personal contact with a professor to learn, as long as there are students who need the sense of community found on a campus where all students call each other by name, and as long as there are students who are motivated to make traditions rather than follow them--there will be small, private

ATTEND METHODIST COLLEGE

FAYETTEVILLE - John Ashford, Red Springs baseball stand-out, will attend Methodist College this fall, according to Coach Tom Austin of Methodist.

Ashford, All-Conference pitcher for the Red Springs High School team in the past two seasons, was named the baseball team's Most Valuable Player this spring. He also received All-Conference honors and Most Valuable Player in football.

"John is a big, strong kid who can provide some real power in the Monarch lineup," says Coach Austin, who led the Methodist College baseball team to a Dixie conference championship and a 27-8 season this year.

A native of Red Springs, Ashford is the son of Mrs. Carolyn Ashford. He played his high school baseball under coach Chuck Pope.

FORMER ORLANDO COACH NAMED
'COACH OF THE YEAR'

FAYETTEVILLE - Tom Austin, former baseball coach at Bishop Moore High School and resident of Orlando, was named "Co-Coach of the Year" for the Dixie Intercollegiate Athletic Conference 1980 after leading Methodist College to a 27-8 season and the Conference Championship.

Austin, in his first year at the Fayetteville, N.C. college, led his team to victories over several NCAA Division I opponents. Assisting in that effort was another Orlando area native, freshman shortstop Chris Wolters.

Wolters played his high school ball at Bishop Moore under Austin and traveled to Methodist to play his collegiate ball under Austin there. A key infielder for the championship Monarchs, Wolters was named to the DIAC All-Conference team.

Wolters is the son of Mr. Raymond C. Wolters of Winter Park, Florida.

ECCC, held annually on the campus of Methodist College, provides week-long instruction for junior high and senior high cheerleaders, according to Gene Clayton, camp director.

"We approach the 10th East Coast Cheerleading Camp, begun in 1971, with excitement in our success," says Clayton.

"Enrollment has reached capacity for the past two years, despite the influx of new cheerleading camps within our state."

Serving as counselors for ECCC '80 will be Brenda Mitchell and Neil Graff of Auburn University; Sherry Nix and Barbara Bozard of Clemson; Lisa Chavez, Mary Beth Dvorak, and Michelle Gilson of Notre Dame; Teresa Jones of UNC-Chapel Hill; Alice Goins, and Rhonda Swain, Mike Aman, Page Stout and Donna Pritchard of East Carolina University; and Heather Host of Appalachian State University.

Assisting these counselors will be Methodist College Cheerleaders: Tricia Turner, Ann Johnson, Shelah Burroughs, and Cheri DePriter of Fayetteville.; Susan Matthews of Clayton; Angela Gentry of Roxboro; Rennis Stack of North, S.C. and Rachelle McCollum of Raleigh. Also assisting will be Donna Lovelace and Terry Hall, captains of last year's championship Westover squad, and Kathy Allen, also of Westover.

Gwen Sykes, co-founder and program director of the camp, estimates that over 50 schools will attend ECCC this summer.

Susan Geddie of Raleigh will serve as Physical fitness coordinator of the camp.

JACK PEYROUSE ELECTED TO ARTS COUNCIL BOARD

FAYETTEVILLE - Dr. Jack Peyrouse, director of Theatre Arts at Methodist College, has been elected to serve a three-year term as a member of the Board of Directors of the Fayetteville/Cumberland County Arts Council.

Dr. Peyrouse, a graduate of the University of Denver and the University of Nebraska, came to Methodist in 1977. Since that time, he has performed in local productions of A Man for All Seasons, The Great White Hope and The Nutcracker Suite, in addition to directing all Methodist College Student productions.

As a member of the Arts Council board, Dr. Peyrouse will coordinate policies and actively participate in Arts Council programs.

"These board members are actually resource people from the community," says Anne Wilce, Arts Council spokesman.

"We are particularly excited to have Jack Peyrouse representing Methodist College because of the strengthening of bonds between our two organizations."
