With crises in Poland, El Salvador, the Office of the Budget and Fayetteville Revitalization, it seems a little presumptuous of me to ask for your help in the promotion of the Methodist College Fine Arts Festival. On the other hand, it is perhaps because of these crises now and the crises that faced similar civilizations in the past that man has always found his release and his refuge in the arts.

The Fayetteville community is not hungry for a week of cultural activity; we have the Fayetteville Symphony, the North Carolina Symphony, numerous dance theaters, and theater productions almost weekly. The uniqueness of the Fine Arts Festival at Methodist seems to me to be two-fold: one, the events are free to members of the Fayetteville community and anyone else who wishes to attend; and two, these events represent an unusually wide diversity in cultural offerings.

Certainly the primary focus of the Fine Arts Festival is on the world premiere of Maxwell Anderson's Raft on the River. That's quite an undertaking for any amateur theatric group; certainly, it has been for a small college theater department. Yet, the caliber of the performance is going to be surprisingly good due to the all-community effort that is found in the areas of production from choreography to composing. It is my personal hope that you and Mary Vann will be able to attend the Wednesday evening premiere performance of Raft. If you will give me a call, I will see to it that your tickets for whichever performance you choose are on their way to you.

The brochure enclosed provides you with basic information on the multitude of cultural activities to be found on the Methodist College campus during the week of April 12 through 19. Thank you very much for any help you can give us in making the community aware that these events are open to the public at no charge to them. It's Methodist College's gift to the community.

Warmest personal regards.

Subject: Methodist College Fine Arts Week (What else?)
Date: March 30, 1981

I realize that over-saturation is becoming a real possibility in the matter of Raft on the River and the Methodist College Fine Arts Festival, but please bear with me. There are so many good stories here and so many feature angles that I need your help in sorting out which ones would be of most interest to your particular readers. Let me just brief for you some of the ideas that I envision with feature possibilities concerning either Raft on the River directly or events of the Fine Arts Festival surrounding it that week.

1. Raft on the River will give its second performance on Thursday evening, April 16. At this performance, Ms. Alma Rhodes will sign the play for a large group of people who have impairment in hearing. Additionally, Ms. Rhodes' husband, who works with the blind, is bringing a group that he works with to the performance to enjoy the sound of Raft on the River. I must admit that at first the idea of both groups attending on the same night and any coverage of that particular event would smack of sentimentality and almost border on poor taste. But I have now thought that there is a beneficial angle in this that has nothing to do with Raft on the River but rather has to do with the ability of someone who has lost one sense to still live a productive and enjoyable life with those senses he has remaining. This may well be a tie-in to mainstreaming the handicapped into our society, particularly in the cultural arena; and to the International Year of the Disabled Person.
2. This is perhaps more of a photography format than anything else. The Beaux Arts Ball, kicking off the Methodist College Fine Arts Festival, will be held on Saturday night, April 11 in the Methodist College Student Union. The unique aspects of the Beaux Arts Ball are the theme, which is Hannibal 1850, and the dress, which will be costumes of that period. The Methodist College Art Department will be selling masques for those wishing to purchase one. They have all been handmade by members of the Art Club for the event. We really don't want any publicity on the Ball per se because it is only open to Methodist College students, faculty and staff; but I do believe, that there are some real photographic ideas and images which will be found there. This might also give us a good lead-in to a festive week of activities.

3. There is also going to be a "Tom Sawyer-Paint-The-Fence" window painting contest which should lend itself to photographic treatment easily. The procedure is this: the students will chose a window in front of Reeves Auditorium on which they will sketch and paint a design in acrylics into which a certain percentage of soap has been added. (The soap obviously is to provide easy cleaning of the windows when the week is over.) This concept is not new to the Methodist College campus. Similar contests have been held for the two previous Christmases for windows in the cafeteria. Some exceptionally good art has been seen during those contests; I am hoping for the same quality in this. My estimation is that these windows will be completed by Tuesday, April 14, and will be available for photography any time after that. If you wish to get students in the process of painting the windows, so that I can find out a schedule of those who are painting.

SUGGESTED FEATURES:

1. Ron Lee, former professional football player for the Baltimore Colts, is currently a student at Methodist College seeking teacher education certification. He is married to a Fayetteville native and that is the reason he is finishing his education at Methodist College. It is my understanding that Ron was sidelined because of injury. His home phone number is 864-0912.
2. The Methodist College Golf Team is well on its way to an NCAA National Tournament bid. Interestingly enough, NCAA Division III National Championship in golf will be played in Pinehurst, N.C. on the famous Pinehurst #6 Golf Course. Gene Clayton, golf coach for the Monarchs, is convinced that this is the year that Methodist College will get their national bid. He has some interesting speculations on what this will mean to the college, and to his recruitment of high school athletes.
3. Methodist College has opted to join the NCAA for women's athletics beginning 1981-82. This represents a change for Methodist who has to this date been a member of the AIAW. Although the controversy still rages between proponents of both organizations, it is the belief of the Methodist College Athletic Director Gene Clayton and its Women's Coordinator, Rose Paul Blackwell, that the NCAA holds definite advantages for student athletes at Methodist College. Their viewpoints and the viewpoints expressed at a recent coaches' conference for the DIAC member schools might prove enlightening for those people caught up in the controversy.

S. SCOTT HOOD TO OPEN
SENIOR ART EXHIBIT

FAYETTEVILLE--S. Scott Hood, senior art major at Methodist College, will open her senior art exhibit on Monday, April 6 at North Carolina National Bank in Cross Creek Mall.

Ms. Hood will exhibit approximately fifteen pieces including works in oils, linoleum, diagonal wood-cut prints, prismacolor drawings and sculpture. Using predominately architectural subjects and geometrics as the basis for her works, Ms. Hood states that prismacolor is her favorite medium of expression because of the softness of color achieved.

Ms. Hood began her training in art about ten years ago as a student at Peace Junior College in Raleigh. She classifies her style as special configurations and cites "Flexacisor" as her favorite piece to be shown in the April exhibit.

Ms. Hood will graduate in May with her major in art and a minor in business. Her exhibit is open to the public during regular banking hours from 9:00 a.m. until 1:30 p.m. and from 3:00 p.m. to 5:00 p.m. daily through Monday, April 13.

PEARCE REJECTS SCARE TALK

FAYETTEVILLE--Dr. Richard W. Pearce, president of Methodist College, has called for more sensible thinking and less scare tactics in the matter of federal aid to college students.

"There are no expected cut-backs in student financial aid on the federal level that are as drastic as some reaction would indicate," according to Dr. Pearce. "The Reagan proposal seeks only to eliminate the abuse in federal financial aid rather than to put an economic hardship on students with demonstratable need."

The need-based programs are still expected to be funded by the federal government, according to Dr. Pearce, but they will provide only the student's demonstrated need as opposed to current practices whereby a student can obtain assistance in excess of demonstrated need through the GSL program.

Dr. Pearce expects that the Basic Educational Opportunity Grant will remain as is with a $1750 maximum award to an individual student. Work-study funds are also expected to be appropriated at the current, if not an increased, level. Controversy over the National Defense Student Loan and the administration's proposal to abolish the NDSL program within the next four years has virtually been abandoned, according to Pearce. Current projections indicate that the NDSL will remain intact and be awarded as it has been in previous years.

. . . are receiving other financial aid would only be able to apply for GSL in the amount needed to meet college expenses that this other aid does not provide.

The second change in the GSL is expected to alter the interest payment. Currently, the GSL pays the interest on student loans while the student is in college. If the revision is accepted, the student will assume responsibility for the interest paid on the Guaranteed Student Loans.

Additionally, there is a requested revision which would alter the payment of social security benefits for college education. This is still in debate.

"Financial aid is certainly going to be available for students who demonstrate financial need--I believe that it will be equivalent to the amounts awarded in the past," asserts Pearce. "The philosophical difference is that no student will be awarded more than his demonstrated need."

Students are encouraged to be optimistic and apply early for financial aid. College financial aid officers must have all available information on students before they can make financial aid awards once programs are officially funded.

Dr. Pearce stipulates that he is discussing federal assistance to students with financial aid needs; not federal funds for college buildings, curricula, or other federal assistance programs.

Controversy over the National Defense Student Loan and the administration's proposal to abolish the NDSL program within the next four years has virtually been abandoned, according to Pearce. Current projections indicate that the NDSL will remain intact and be awarded as it has been in previous years.

Two areas in which changes are anticipated by Pearce are in the Guaranteed Student Loan which currently offers students the opportunity to borrow the total amount of their college education. Revision calls for the Guaranteed Student Loan to be given to students only in the amount of their unmet need. This means that students who

. . . are receiving other financial aid would only be able to apply for GSL in the amount needed to meet college expenses that this other aid does not provide.

The second change in the GSL is expected to alter the interest payment. Currently, the GSL pays the interest on student loans while the student is in college. If the revision is accepted, the student will assume responsibility for the interest paid on the Guaranteed Student Loans.

Additionally, there is a requested revision which would alter the payment of social security benefits for college education. This is still in debate.

"Financial aid is certainly going to be available for students who demonstrate financial need--I believe that it will be equivalent to the amounts awarded in the past," asserts Pearce. "The philosophical difference is that no student will be awarded more than his demonstrated need."

Students are encouraged to be optimistic and apply early for financial aid. College financial aid officers must have all available information on students before they can make financial aid awards once programs are officially funded.

Dr. Pearce stipulates that he is discussing federal assistance to students with financial aid needs; not federal funds for college buildings, curricula, or other federal assistance programs.

Golden Knights

To Jump

At Methodist

When the "Golden Knights" come to Methodist College on April 7, they will be continuing a community relations task that they have been performing since 1959 when the team was first created. Originally patterned after the Navy's "Blue Angels" and the Air Force's "Thunderbirds," the "Golden Knights" assist the U.S. Army Recruiting Command and also vies for honors in international and national level competition.

The members of the "Knights" are all enlisted personnel in the U.S. Army. They must have an unblemished military record, have at least 150 free-fall jumps and attend a course at Ft. Bragg to be on the team. Team members make from 200 to 250 demonstrations in a nine month season. In addition, there is competition.

In the area of competition, the "Knights" have been busy. Last year they took five accuracy records from the Soviet Union. In both national and international competition, the "Golden Knights" have been the most successful team in the history of sport parachuting. The "Knights" brought honors home from both the Pan American games and the Conseil Internationale du Sport

The "Golden Knights" have also helped in the developing of experimental parachutes. They were the first to use triangular and rectangular canopies. Currently, the "Knights" use a rectangular ram-air canopy which allows great maneuverability. A forward air speed of 22 mph lets the jumper actually "fly"

JURIED ART EXHIBIT
OPENS SUNDAY

FAYETTEVILLE--The prestigious Methodist College Juried Art Show is only one of five exhibits which will be available for viewing during the Fine Arts Festival.

Opening with a formal reception in Horner Administration Building at 4 o'clock, the Juried Art Show will exhibit over 50 accepted entries with award-winning selections appropriately noted.

The Juried Art Exhibit will be on display daily during the week from 8 a.m. until 6 p.m. in the Horner Administration Building at no charge.

In keeping with the observance of Holy Week, an exhibit of crucifixion art will be on display in Davis Memorial Library on the Methodist campus. An exhibit of Jane Berry's collection of sculpted crosses will occur simultaneously.

Ms. Berry's cross collection dates back as early as the sixth century. The portion of her exhibit on display in Davis Memorial Library will include reproductions of crosses from the Metropolitan Museum of Art and the British Museum of Art. Of particular interest in this exhibit is the Coventry Cross, made after a World War II air raid in Europe. The timbers that fell around the altar contained large metal studs from which the workmen fashioned a cross as a reminder of the bombed church.
