WOULD-BE GENTLEMAN TO BE PRESENTED

AT FINE ARTS FESTIVAL

FAYETTEVILLE—The French playwright Moliere shared his observations of human nature and social practices in his comedy, The Would-Be Gentleman (Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme.) The play will open the Fifth Annual Methodist College Fine Arts Festival February 14, at 8 o'clock in the evening in Reeves Auditorium on the Methodist College campus. The 1985 Fine Arts Festival will honor and examine "France and Its Cultural Influences."

The Would-Be Gentleman is a "comedy-ballet" centered around M. Jourdain, a loveable, dull-witted man. Jourdain has a new wardrobe made as he takes lessons in music, dancing, philosophy, and fencing so he will have more appeal for a "lady friend." In the meantime, his wife is trying to push him into finding a suitable husband for their daughter. The two plots move together to the climactic "Turkish ballet" at the end of the show.

The music for the ballets and songs was composed by Italian composer Lully, who collaborated with Moliere. The same music will be used in the Methodist College production.

Dr. Jack Peyrouse will direct the show; Ann Clark is the choreographer.

An objective of the production is to create the spirit and times of Louis XIV. The splendor of the scenery and costumes has been designed by Mrs. Eleanor Howell, and constructed by Stewart Murray and Patty Whitaker. Mr. Nelson Collier has created the period furniture which Methodist College

A salon will follow the February 14 opening performance of The Would-Be Gentleman, featuring the cast and audience mingling together in the true French Renaissance social gathering tradition.

Two other evening performances will be Friday and Saturday, February 15 and 16 at 8 o'clock in Reeves Auditorium. In addition, a special matinee

METHODIST COLLEGE'S MOORE FAMILY IS EXEMPLARY OF CHRISTIAN LOVE

FAYETTEVILLE-Christian love is best shown by example. A beautiful expression of that love is found in the story of a young Vietnamese, Cu Phung, and his foster parents, Sgt. and Mrs. John Moore. All three are students at Methodist College in Fayetteville. Cu is currently a sophomore majoring in chemistry. Sgt. Moore and his wife are students in the evening classes; he is pursuing a business degree and she is enrolled in the continuing education program.

The Moores are a military family, transferring often and to distant places. After having two children of their own (Katie, now 13, and John, Jr., 9), they decided several years ago that adoption would be the best future route to increasing the family fold. When Sgt. Moore was on assignment in Korea six years ago, his interest in adoption was sparked by the unfortunate number of AmerAsian children at a nearby orphanage.

After much paperwork, (though foreign adoptions usually involve a year to a year and a-half of such and the Moores sped up the process to only six months), John and Diane Moore became the proud parents of a baby girl, then eight months old. When Sgt. Moore returned to the States after completing his tour of duty, he brought with him Anna.

From their home in Missouri, the Moores were transferred to Chanute Air Force Base in Illinois. Attending a church off-base, the Moores read one Sunday morning in their church bulletin that the Catholic Social Services

When Sgt. Moore returned to the States after completing his tour of duty, he brought with him Anna.

From their home in Missouri, the Moores were transferred to Chanute Air Force Base in Illinois. Attending a church off-base, the Moores read one Sunday morning in their church bulletin that the Catholic Social Services program was seeking foster homes for refugee children. Responding quickly that "we have a spare bed," Sgt. and Mrs. Moore once again opened their home.

After interview questions concerning their expectations of their own children and expectations of a possible foster child, the Moores traveled to Peoria, Illinois, to visit the Catholic Social Services Center where the refugee children were staying. At the Center, the Moores met Cu Phung for the first time. He then visited in their home several times before he actually became a part of the family.

Mrs. Moore believes Cu was able to see that since they had already adopted one foreign child, they truly were loving people who really cared for him. Also, she credits the Catholic Social Services program for their careful matching of child to parent.

Because of their recent adoption of Anna and the quickness with which her necessary paperwork was handled, Cu Phung's paperwork was processed quickly as well. He was 16 when he moved into the Moore's Illinois household.

(Cu had been smuggled out of Vietnam at the age of 14 by his mother, who had to pay a high price in gold for her action. His father had died from a stroke earlier, and as Cu got older, the likelihood of his having to join the Communist Vietnamese Army increased.* Because she did not want such a life for her son, Cu's mother sacrificed her only child by smuggling him to Malaysia.

Once there, Cu lived in a refugee camp which was supplied food by the Red Cross. Sustaining the heat of the humid and sometimes unbearable Malaysian climate, Cu suffered through seeing families broken apart by certain countries' officials coming into the camp, literally pointing to five people at random, and taking those five "home" to a better life. Even as he tells his story today, the agony of witnessing such separations is obvious on his face.

Yet Cu was "lucky," he says, because he was under 18 and therefore Yet Cu was "lucky," he says, because he was under 18 and therefore considered an orphan. Hence, he qualified to come to the US under its social services program.)

Mrs. Moore atests that it was an adjustment for her as well as Cu when he moved in. Because he had been the only child of his Vietnamese mother, Cu had led a sheltered and somewhat abundant life in Vietnam. He was even afforded the opportunity of continuing his education after the 1975 Communist take-over. Yet suddenly he was a member of a rather large family, the oldest child to boot, and he hardly knew enough English to communicate. (He had, however, been given English and US customs classes in his first three months in the refugee center in Illinois.)

Mrs. Moore believes becoming a part of the military environment benefitted Cu. Because he was living on an Air Force Base, counselors who dealt regularly with uprooted, misplaced children were available. Also, within about a 20-mile radius of their home, several other refugee children had been taken into foster care. The Moores, to aid Cu's initial adjustment, helped host a Chinese New Year's party for the neighboring "boat children."

Another example of Cu benefitting from his placement in a military home was the continuance of his education. Having had ten years of schooling in Vietnam, Cu was placed into the 11th grade at the high school in the Moore's school district. All refugee children were not that lucky, Mrs. Moore admits. Some of them who might have had only five years of education, even if they were 17 years old, were placed into the 6th grade.

Shortly after Cu became a member of the family, the Moores were again transferred to Pontiac, Illinois. Living there for two years, boy whose foster parents were divorcing?

"Of course."

Yet Mrs. Moore remembers well that this young man was one of the unfortunate ones who had been placed in the 6th grade because he had only had five years of school -- yet he was 14. They were able, however, to move him into the junior high school before the military called once again with the command "move."

Fayetteville/Ft. Bragg became the Moore's new home. Giving both the foster children the option to move with the family, only Cu came. The other boy stayed in Illinois because he had a brother in a foster home in Peoria.

Because Cu had graduated from high school, he was no longer a ward of the state and the small stipend the Moores had been receiving for his care was terminated. Yet they chose to continue to be Cu's family and help support him.

The Moores will move to Germany in May, yet this time Cu will not make the move with them. He plans to stay at Methodist until he completes his undergraduate degree and then he wants to attend graduate school to pursue his lifelong goal of becoming a successful chemical engineer.

A major reason Cu wants to stay in the States (besides his desire to complete his education) is because he will qualify to become a US citizen in June, 1985. And once his citizenship is granted, Cu can apply to the US Immigration Services to have his mother brought out of Vietnam.

In the meantime, the Moores are working to advance the date Cu's citizenship will become effective. They want all the paperwork complete Cu has strong feelings about his life with the Moores and living in America.

"They treat me just like I am their son. I am very lucky, and America truly is the 'land of opportunity,'" Cu says in clear, solid English.

Mrs. Moore reflects on the generosity of her husband and herself. She simply says, "We treat them (Cu and Anna) like our other (own) kids -- because they are our kids."

The spirit of love...the universal brotherhood of men from all nations...the hope of peace among people...Cu Phung has found these values and more in the hearts of a loving family.

METHODIST COLLEGE TOPS

1000 IN ENROLLMENT

FAYETTEVILLE-In a climate of declining enrollment in colleges nationwide, Methodist College has just topped the 1000 mark in student enrollment for the 1985 spring semester.

Boasting a 20 percent increase in students, Director of Admissions Charlotte Coheley has announced a total of 1092 students enrolled in the day and evening programs at Methodist.

"We had the largest freshman class in ten years this fall," said Coheley. "That, coupled with an unanticipated boost in new students for spring semester, has put us over the 1000 mark."

Coheley indicated a number of possible reasons for the increase in enrollment, including new majors in arts management, communications, computer science and special education as well as new programs in athletics and performing arts.

Methodist College is in the second year of President M. Elton Hendricks' administration at the liberal arts college.
