METHODIST COLLEGE: A GROWING COMMUNITY

FAYETTEVILLE-Methodist College is a small, four-year private institution of liberal arts and sciences located on a 600-acre campus bordering the Cape Fear River in Fayetteville, NC. With its built-in diversity in student population because of the nearby military community and its dedicated faculty, getting an education at Methodist College encompasses more than "book learning." At Methodist, one learns to become an individual capable of contributing to a fast-paced, ever-changing world.

A major strength of Methodist is its students. Following are profiles of two current Methodist College students who exemplify the many good qualities of a "typical" MC student. Yet, being "typical" does not rule out being "unique."

Brenda McKimens, a freshman from Fairfax, VA who was a member of the 1984 Homecoming Court, played sweeper on the all-new women's soccer team this past fall. Planning to major in social work, Brenda currently stays busy with her Weaver dormitory involvement which includes delivering balloon-o-grams. Brenda is appreciative of Methodist's "concerned faculty" and looks forward to three more challenging yet successful years at Methodist.

Hawaiian native Richard Bicoy served in the Army for four years before settling in Fayetteville and deciding to continue the education he began at Leeward Community College before enlisting. His campus activities have included membership in Koinonia and Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity; he presently participates in the Student Government Association, the North Carolina

A plus about Methodist that attracted such a talented, vibrant young man? "The small college environment helps develop personal relationships with peers, faculty, and staff. I feel like if I ever need help, someone will be here to help me," Richard explains.

A second strength of Methodist College is its dedicated faculty and staff who daily offer reinforcement and serve as examples of good character to the 800-plus students on campus. Because of its small yet growing size, Methodist professors offer students one-on-one instruction and support while sharing their strong academic backgrounds. In its 28th year of providing quality education in a Christian environment, Methodist is proud of its faculty.

Methodist employs a full-time chaplain who oversees an active program of campus religious life. Koinonia, the student-based religious organization, is well-known and respected on campus, with its members participating in the annual Crop Walk for Hunger, a Christmas gift wrap sale for the Urban Ministry, and Faith-in-Life Week. Methodist provides an environment where faith is nurtured, not demanded.

A third strength of Methodist is its curriculum, to which new programs are continually being added. Four majors, two sports, and two performing groups were established recently on campus. Arts Management, Computer Science, Special Education, and Communications are the four new majors; women's soccer and women's golf are the two new athletic programs. A jazz-dance team has been formed to provide positive visibility for Methodist College as the 20-member squad travels throughout the region. A vocal ensemble, "Rainbow's End," is available for church and civic meetings. In addition to these new ventures, a computer-assisted-composition program is scheduled to begin this spring.

A fourth strength of Methodist College is its strong financial aid program. Because Methodist is a private institution, the initial cost of attending is higher than most public colleges and universities. Yet in the final analysis, getting an education at Methodist usually costs less than public school tuition because of the numerous financial aid opportunities available. $400,000 in scholarship monies is awarded annually. In addition, two increasingly popular financial aid programs are the Incentive Scholarship program and the student-work program. Incentive Scholarships are awarded on the basis of a student's class rank and college board performance; the amount awarded can be as much as $3000. Also, every residential student is given the opportunity to work on campus a maximum of five hours per week for minimum wage.

Methodist College is a growing, vital community where young adults learn to become productive citizens. The campus is open year-round and anyone interested in finding out more information about Methodist is encouraged to visit.

TAMMY TOLAR STAYS BUSY

AT 'MISS METHODIST'

FAYETTEVILLE--Tammy Lynn Tolar, Miss Methodist College 1984-85, is enjoying a busy yet rewarding year representing the college. Capturing the title in September, winning was not a new experience for Tammy. She has won eight other titles, including Miss Seventy-First High School 1981-82.

A native of Fayetteville, Tammy is the daughter of Ernest C. Tolar and Carolyn D. Tolar. While in high school, Tammy was active in the annual school musicals, playing the leading role both her junior and senior years. Her interest in the theatre is apparent at Methodist as well. She recently completed a performance in The Would-Be Gentleman by Moliere during the 1985 Fine Arts Festival.

In addition to maintaining a part-time job at a local bridal salon, representing Methodist College in the Fayetteville/Cumberland County area is keeping Tammy busy. She has made numerous appearances at local high school pageants and has judged one as well. Tammy will represent Methodist College as a guest in the upcoming Miss Fayetteville pageant and she also plans to ride in the Dogwood Festival parade this spring.

Yet of all her appearances Tammy says the "most exciting and rewarding one of all" was her visitation to the local VA hospital on February 14 for the annual "National Salute to Veterans." At the hospital, Tammy met many people from the military community, lunched with WTVD's Andy Park, and toured the hospital wards, sharing a smile with the many veterans there.

ITERATIONS II TO BE HELD

AT METHODIST COLLEGE

FAYETTEVILLE--Methodist College will hold Iterations II, the second presentation of the program series designed to showcase faculty achievements on Thursday evening, April 11, at 7:30 in Reeves Auditorium.

Christened in November 1984, the Iterations program gives Methodist College faculty the opportunity to present to the local community and Methodist College campus papers and addresses given at conferences and symposiums across the US.

One of the two faculty members on the April 11 program agenda is Methodist College Academic Dean Dr. Lynn Sadler, designer of the Iterations program. Dr. Sadler will present a version of a paper given in the fall at an in-service workshop for all junior college and community college English teachers in Alabama, entitled "What Everybody Should Know About Milton."

The second speaker scheduled for Iterations II is Methodist Associate Professor of Education Dr. Kennieth Calvert. Presenting a version of a paper recently given at the Sam Houston State University Annual Book Festival in Huntsville, Texas, Dr. Calvert's topic is "Randolph Caldecott: Pioneer Illustrator."

Recently cited in Administrator: The Management Newsletter for Higher Education, the Iterations program is free and the public is invited to attend the April 11 presentations.

THIRD ANNUAL SOUTHERN WRITERS SEMINAR

SCHEDULED AT METHODIST COLLEGE

FAYETTEVILLE--The third annual Southern Writers Lecture Series is scheduled for April 19-20 in Hensdale Chapel on the Methodist College campus. Program director Dr. Sue Kimball, an associate professor of English at Methodist, instituted the seminar three years ago following the celebration of James Agee in the 1982 Methodist College Fine Arts Festival.

The theme of the 1985 series is "Southern Writing in a Feminist Era." A recent article in the Washington Post by Jonathan Yardley prompted Kimball to invite Southern female writers to discuss Yardley's statement that "We are entering a significant new period in American letters, one that will be dominated by female writers and characterized by feminist themes."

Writers scheduled to speak during the two-day seminar include Daphne Athas, a lecturer at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill who has written five novels, numerous short stories and articles, and an award winning play. Athas will open the seminar at 7:30 in the evening on April 19.

Following Athas' presentation, Greensboro native Candance Flynt will speak. Author of Chasing Dad and Sins of Omission, the former newspaper reporter is currently working on her third novel.

Jill McCorkle, the young Chapel Hill resident who is a Lumberton native, will begin the Saturday session of the seminar at 9:30 in the morning on April 20. McCorkle recently had two novels published simultaneously by Algonquin Books, The Cheerleader and July 7.

Suzanne Newton, Visiting Professor of Creative Writing at Meredith College,

A luncheon is scheduled for twelve o'clock noon in the lobby of Reeves Auditorium. Reservations are required and entertainment will be provided by the Rainbow's End quartet.

Durham-born Sylvia Wilkinson is scheduled to speak at 1:30 in the afternoon, following the luncheon. Wilkinson just completed a year at Washington University in St. Louis where she was a visiting professor of writing in the MFA program. The author of five novels, Wilkinson has written two non-fiction books on car racing and has published thirteen juvenile books under a pseudonym.

A tea, given in honor of the last two writers on the program, will follow Wilkinson's address. Betty Adcock and Sally Buckner, both of Raleigh, will deliver a dual address at 3:00 Saturday afternoon. Teaching at Meredith and Peace Colleges, respectively, the two authors are sponsored by the Friends of Weymouth. Adcock has published two books of poetry and Buckner has published over forty poems in various magazines and anthologies.

The public is invited to attend the two-day seminar free of charge, with the exception of a charge for the Saturday luncheon. For more information, call Dr. Sue Kimball, Methodist College English Department, 488-7110, extension 284.
