Fayetteville, N.C. 28301

For Immediate Release

To: Sport Editors
From: Tinnie Salzano, Publications
Subject: Fayetteville residents attending baseball play-offs
Date: May 20, 1985

The news bureau has sent out hometown releases on each non-Fayetteville Methodist College baseball player, detailing information on the Monarch's selection to attend the first-round of the NCAA Division III Regional Baseball Tournament. Four team members, however, are Fayetteville residents.

In your upcoming coverage of Methodist in the tournament, would you please mention specifically the four players listed below as Fayetteville residents? We want to try and ensure "equal coverage" for each team member.

If additional information is needed, please call me.

Many thanks.

Fayetteville residents who are members of the Methodist College Baseball Team:

Rob Boswell--Senior--Pitcher
Artie Hall--Junior--Outfielder
David Horne--Sophomore--Pitcher/Infielder
Frank Sessoms--Senior--Pitcher

SMALL COLLEGES CAN HELP STUDENTS MAKE IT BIG

FAYETTEVILLE--Methodist College is spreading the word, along with 650 other colleges in the United States, that "Small Colleges Can Help You Make It Big."

As part of a nationwide campaign to promote the benefits of small independent colleges, Methodist College will participate in the recognition of successful small college graduates in the local community. A search is currently being conducted to identify local professional and community leaders who hold degrees from small colleges.

"Successful graduates are the best endorsement of small colleges," says Gwen Sykes, recently-named Director of Special Projects at Methodist.

"Nationally-recognized small college graduates include President Ronald Reagan, Senator John Glenn, Billy Graham, Paul Newman, Leslie Stahl and Senator Gary Hart--to name but a few."

According to Sykes, Methodist College will develop its own regional list of prominent graduates in answer to a request from the Council of Independent Colleges.

To supplement a summer survey, small college graduates are invited to contact Sykes with information concerning their college and degree.

The "Small Colleges Can Help You Make It Big" campaign follows on the heels of the release of two major reports, one by the National Institute of Education and the other by the National Endowment for the Humanities, calling for increased emphasis on the liberal arts and teaching excellence, "just the very values small colleges offer the American public," said

"Small colleges have a compelling story to tell, and the effective communication of this story can influence their continuing vitality and quality. It is time that small colleges are understood and valued for the great contribution that they make to our society," he added.

The program will emphasize the collective qualities that make small colleges unique in the nation's dual system of private and public higher education: a commitment to the individual and to personalized education; an emphasis on teaching quality and the liberal arts; unique programs and distinctive educational missions; freedom and flexibility to innovate and be responsive; small size, encouraging lively interaction and close relationships with faculty and students; a moral and ethical dimension; and community service.

The campaign is funded by the Atlantic Richfield Foundation, Exxon Education Foundation, Shell Companies Foundation, United States Steel Foundation, Alcoa Foundation, The Bristol-Myers Fund, the H. J. Heinz Company Foundation, and The New York Times Company Foundation, Inc. The volunteer coordinator for the campaign is Joel Weiner, Executive Vice President of Kraft Foods, Inc. The volunteer advertising agency is Saatchi and Compton Worldwide, the seventh largest worldwide agency.
