Saying My Goodbyes

Gabrielle Isaac
Editor-in-Chief

As I reflect on this year, I see that I've lost a lot, gained a lot and learned a lot. Much of what I've learned has been the result of some hurtful situations. I've learned to guard myself and to watch what I say. But most of all, I've learned that I have my sorority sisters, good family members and good friends that I can trust with just about anything.

There is nothing quite as special as having that kind of support system. When something goes wrong, there is always someone there to pick you up when you fall.

From my sorority (Beta Sigma Phi), I have learned that "sisters are angels who pick us up when our wings forget how to fly." I will truly miss my sisters Kierra Middleton and Devon Wilson. I hope that I never lose contact with them and that they have successful careers and remember that they will always be my sisters, no matter how far they travel.

Also, I couldn't have gotten anywhere without the support of my mother and my entire family. I am blessed to have such a great support system. Most people can't say that their mother is their best friend, but I am fortunate enough to say that we have that sort of relationship. My brother and grandparents have also been important in my life. Without my entire family, I don't know what I'd do.

Last but not least, I have to thank my best friend, and fellow staff member, Jeremy York. Throughout this year, he's made my job a whole lot easier by working as the design editor for the newspaper. Through our cooperation, we have made the newspaper an eye-catching, interesting read. Aside from working together, we are best friends. I've never met a person that can think exactly the same as I do. Real friends make sacrifices like watching Les Mis for three hours, wasting whole tanks of gas and taking time to remind each other to wake up in the morning. I can't imagine what school will be like without him, but I know that he will succeed in everything that he does.

I'll never forget the friendships that I've developed with these graduates. I wish them nothing but success in the future! I love you all and you mean the world to me!!

Leadership Fellows

Gabrielle Isaac
Editor-in-Chief

On April 23, a group of students, faculty and staff gathered in the Alumni Dinning Hall for the Leadership Fellows Banquet. Distinguished guests attended the banquet that welcomed future and current leaders with a handshake, a pin and a smile.

Dr. Andrew Zeigler, the adviser for the organization, welcomed everyone to the event. He introduced Dr. Hancock, who was the person responsible for the formation of the MU Leadership Fellows.

“Were it not for the vision of one person, we would not be here,” Zeigler said in reference to Hancock.

Zeigler mentioned that Hancock is an avid traveler. The Leadership Fellows presented Hancock with a “Leadership Passport” where he could record the places that he has traveled.

Zeigler invited the attendees to enjoy their dinner. During this time, students, staff and faculty had the opportunity to commune with one another.

After dinner, Leigh Ann Philbee, a representative of the Leadership Fellows, introduced the guest speaker, Michele Macumber. Macumber is the chairman of Fayetteville Young Professionals.

“If you want a quality, act like you already have it,” Macumber said.

Macumber had followed this motto and acted like a leader, so she became a leader. She began to involve herself in different organizations where she could use her leadership skills. She, and the organizations that she was associated with, were always out in the community.

She shared her good experiences where she was able to work with a group of people who shared both the work and the credit for the job. Then, she shared an experience where the chairman of the event that she was working with had taken all of the credit. The same chairman made it seem as though everything was planned single-handedly and that no other person took part in the making of the event.

Macumber explained that a good leader would not accept all of the praise, but would share the credit with anyone who helped him or her.

“Be humble, have confidence, build it and share it with those around you,” Macumber concluded.

After Macumber’s speech, the members of the MU Leadership Fellows were pinned and introduced.

“I have been continually impressed with their dedication,” Zeigler announced.

The Leadership Fellows are hoping to expand their organization and welcome future leaders with a handshake, a pin and a smile.
